

Silver Machine

As you can see, the combo (named 'Voyager') is now built, and on the road.

The silver machine is certainly a head-turner and an eye-catcher. If it wasn't for an article by Doug about his Red Ducati combo, and if it wasn't for the Kliktronic gear-changer, none of this would have happened. (If only this technology had been around earlier).

Unit Sidecars have done a great job and built me a machine to be proud of. Driving a combo is as different as driving a solo bike is to a car. As I am finding out the hard way. But, ohhh, the fun of learning. To be in the open air, as opposed to being in a tin can is indescribable. It's a pity summer is nearly over.

So, as you can see, being bound to a wheelchair doesn't mean being bound to a car. With a ramp, a transfer seat, boot stirrups, and hand controls, I am free to enjoy a form of travel I haven't enjoyed since 1973.

Alas it's not all, good news. I have discovered muscles I didn't even know existed. They are definitely letting me know that they are being woken up. So now I have another task, to build up my lower arm muscles.

Thank you all at NABD for your help and Advice
